In recent years, the PRC telecommunications industry has experienced rapid growth and development. At the same time, competition in the telecommunications industry, especially in traditional voice business, has become intense and the Company has experienced increasing challenges posed by mobile communications and increased diversity of communication means.

On 24 May 2008, the Ministry of Industry and Information, the National Development and Reform Commission and the Ministry of Finance issued the Joint Announcement. The Joint Announcement clearly states that the principal goals for the reform of the structure of the telecommunications sector are, to grant three 3G licences and to support the formation of three market competitors where each has nationwide network resources, relatively comparable strength and scale as well as full services operation capabilities with enhanced competitiveness. In light of the current telecommunications industry landscape and for the purpose of implementing such goals, the acquisition of the CDMA network (including assets and subscribers) of China Unicom by China Telecom, the merger of China Unicom and China Netcom, the transfer of the basic telecommunications business of China Satellite Communications to China Telecom and the merger of China Tietong into China Mobile are encouraged. Such reform and restructuring is associated with the grant of 3G licences which will be granted upon completion of the restructuring. The Joint Announcement has created a favourable environment for the Company to implement its strategic transformation into an integrated information services provider.

The Company is the world's largest wireline telecommunications and broadband services provider, providing telecommunications and information services including voice, data, image and multimedia mainly in 20 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions in the PRC and servicing approximately 216 million fixed-line subscribers and over 38 million broadband users.
